

Happy Friday!

Let's Be Creative! with LBC

Every day at 1pm, seven days a week, we're releasing a new arts video on the LBC Facebook page where students of all ages and their families will be able to learn and participate in the arts from their own homes.

Last week we launched our very first Zoom classes for improv and dance! Your students are welcome to join in- find the information about those classes and an archive of our videos on our webpage. Feel free to share with your students or use in your lessons as you see fit.

This coming week, we'll exploring how to create Junk Mail Journals, exploring Dragons Love Tacos 2 through drama, and continuing our guitar and ukulele tutorials!

Digital Residencies

We are continuing to explore options to adapt our residencies to digital format wherever possible. If you're interested in bringing LBC arts-integrated residencies to your students this year but have not scheduled with us this year, feel free to reach out to Hannah Keefer to discuss options that would work for you and your students.

connect teachers and students to learning opportunities as we continue to shelter-in-place. Check out a few of our favorites this week:

Our friends at California Poets in the Schools, based right here in Sonoma County, has curated a series of lessons created by professional poets throughout California. These online, free poetry workshops are geared for students in 1st-12th grade. Their resources work well for families to engage together, but young people can also complete activities independently.

The California Indian Museum and Cultural Center has an amazing YouTube channel with resources ranging from storytelling, active play, Pomo/Miwok language, and more! We're particularly inspired by their CIMCC Fieldtrips playlist!

Acadiana Center for the Arts, based in Louisiana, is a community-based organization who, like LBC, participates in the Kennedy Center Partners in Education program. Their PACE Online program is an adapted version of their arts-integrated in-school program for grades K-2. These one-off lessons explore animals, plants, weather, and more through the arts! Check out their videos on YouTube.

Just for Teachers

LBC has launched two great digital entertainment opportunities for when you need to put up your feet and relax!

This week, as a part of our Drop the Mic series, our Programming Department has created a playlist which highlights artists who we look forward to having grace the LBC stage over this next year. Checkout our new playlist!

Last Friday we were thrilled to debut our Luther Locals series with the help of Joni Davis, a Northern California based musician, songwriter, teacher, and baker. She has self-released two albums, written music for two independent films Straight White Male, and Harvest, and has played her music around the west coast of the United States, England and the Netherlands. Joni's music is inspired by being uncomfortably human on this magnificent planet. Check out her mini-concert from last week and look for this week's Luther Locals episode, which will drop tonight!

Find these things and more on our Facebook page!
